

The earth is the only home we have.

Humanity is fast coming to a critical point.

Where will evolution lead us?

Will our species make it through the narrow doorway we have created by the havoc we have in our world?

If we are to move through the next phase of existence, we must do a little growing as a species.

It seems people find it hard to let go in a personal way to things that they have grown used to. It seems nearly impossible for the whole world to let go of defining ourselves as either one part of here or there.

Global warming may be our saviour wearing a mask as for the human race to wake up. By definition alone we all must accept we are all of one world and we must all act the part.

If there is already too much carbon air-bound, reducing emissions isn't enough. The reality must start to become clear to those of us who can see. At best it may slow it a little but it is like we are trying to stop the bleeding of a fatal wound with a band aid.

It seems that there is only one solution and it is simple enough. We must take more carbon out of the air not just for today but for all those years that have past. How do we do that? There is only one single thing that is commonly available where every single person can contribute. It won't even cost much money or time – would you like to know what it is?

If in knowing the answer is simple as it is, will it bring you into action? The world will depend upon it?

It is simply – to plant a tree, maybe 3 or 4. Actually, more is better. Find a part of your yard or a bit of space and plant a few more whenever and wherever you can. It is as simple as that.

The humble tree - we all have access to it and it is the single thing that draws carbon out of the air and stores it as it grows.
